always involves devastation agony and death the goal of medicine is to relieve pain promote health and enable a peaceful end of life therefore the claim that war is beneficial for medicine initially seems immoral as it euphemizes the horrendous human cost of combat yet history has shown that urgency national crisis and high occurrence of casualties during wartime can catalyse medical progress nearly all wars have led to medical inventions that are still applied in today s medicine in the 19th century the american civil war brought the use of anaesthesia during wwi blood transfusions were introduced and wwii revealed the importance of antibiotics therefore i assumed that the overall mortality of soldiers has steadily decreased within the last few centuries due to continuous advancement in medicine referring to those facts it seems reasonable that the vietnam war has also led to medical paradigm shifts since little research has been done on the medical achievements and drawbacks of this war the question arises as to how the vietnam conflict has changed modern medicine
